

Expanding Rural Access Distance Delivery of Breast Cancer Support Groups

*The Sierra-Stanford Partnership, A Project of the Sierra Fund and
Stanford University School of Medicine*

A project for women with breast cancer who reside in rural northern California

Women attend a series of eight breast cancer support group meetings at their local community health clinic or hospital where they will be connected via live, interactive video-conferencing with a trained support group leader in Grass Valley, CA. These groups will include breast cancer survivors from three to four other rural communities located throughout rural northern California

Next Groups Scheduled to begin
October 15th, 2009
&
January 7th, 2010
